“ I've struggled to put the words together, put them into full thoughts...

I wish we would have talked more - real conversations as brothers instead of me trying to parent you. Looking back, I learned so much from you and realize I could have learned so much more. You looked at the world through a different lens...

I wish we could have had conversations on faith. Being in your house this week, I feel like you were lacking a little in this. I mean, who else looks at a poster picture with nails in each corner, 3-inch screws, and double-sided tape and says "I'm not sure that's going to hold. Where's my staple gun?"

Jesus said "My Father's house has many rooms; if that were not so, would I have told you that I am going there to prepare a place for you?" Have fun decorating yours and I look forward to living in the same house again...just keep the music down!

I love you and miss you

“ My dearest big brother, the world hasn't felt the same the last couple of days without you here on Earth. You truly never met a stranger and you were always so willing to help anyone in need. When I think about my childhood, it is flooded with memories of you. You taught me that if you liked a song, if you really liked a song, to turn it up as loud as you could no matter who was around, and don't get me started on the belief that duct tape can fix anything. You were one of my first companions in this life and I always knew that in you I had a forever friend. If Heaven ever has a squeaky gate, I know you'll be the first to try to fix it. I love you forever and already miss you so much.
Love your baby sister.

“ Shon, I'll never forget how happy I was to be your big sister. Our family will not be the same without you here. You taught us to love and accept others even if they don't fit the typical mold. You will be remembered and always live in our hearts.
